

Note.

I started collecting and identifying Caddisflies while still at school (about fifteen years ago) and continued the interest through University, where I used a survey of drift as the basis for an honours degree thesis. I have since maintained the interest strictly in my spare time. I am presently trying to compile a species list for the area where I live, and thus add to the other records for this part of Scotland. Having initially concentrated on identifying adults I am now starting to use the recent keys for larvae to try and identify a large backlog of larval material collected over the past fifteen years in the far north and northwest of Scotland where I formerly lived. This may take some time!

I hope this information may be of interest to others.

Yours sincerely

OPUSCULA ZOOLOGICA FLUMINENSIA is a small (printing surface 10 x 16 cm), cheaply produced periodical, published in Switzerland and appearing at irregular intervals. Each paper represents a separate issue (4-40 pp. approx.), therefore production time usually does not exceed 6-10 weeks.

It accepts original research papers in all fields of entomology and invertebrate zoology, with the emphasis on systematics, description of new taxa, biogeography, ecology and behaviour. All manuscripts are refereed and the journal is covered by most of the major abstracting services.

Publication is open to all, and there are no page charges. Manuscripts, in one of the western congress languages, should be submitted in duplicate. A concise English abstract must precede the text. Illustrations should be mounted and labelled by the author. Extra costs for photographs (plates) requiring special quality of paper, of the artist (if figures are not submitted ready for the press), and costs of major alterations in the proofs will be charged.
